Saddleback Saloon Bar & Grill

The History of the Building

German immigrant Adolph H. Preibisch and his wife Emilie came to Austin County in 1860. After the town of Sealy developed along the Gulf, Colorado and Sante Fe Railroad, the Preibische's bought property in the new railroad town. In 1885, they purchased these lots and hired brick mason John Colleton to construct this commercial building for them in 1886-1887. Colleton's brickyard in nearby Bellville, where he fired bricks from Brazos River clay, was the source of material for many of Sealy's early buildings. Sited on a prominent corner lot, the Preibisch building first housed Preibisch's own store, in which he sold household & kitchen furniture, window shades, rugs, carpets and other manner of household goods. As was the practice with many early furniture dealers, Preibisch also made and sold funeral caskets from his store.

The family continued to run the store after Adolph died in 1899. After Emilie's death in 1905, their son W. W. Preibisch took over the business. Later tenants of the Preibisch building included a general merchandise store, grocery store, jewelry & gift shop, and a saloon/pool hall known as "My Place" which served as a setting for several motion picture films, advertisements and Clint Black did his first video here called "Killin Time". The building remained in the Preibisch family until 1946.

The one-part brick commercial structure, which features arched window and door openings and corbelled brickwork, is significant for its association with the early commercial development of Sealy and remains an important part of Sealy's architectural heritage.

The building is now the home of the Saddleback Saloon Bar & Grill. The Saddleback is open every day @ 11:30 AM for lunch and dinner. The Saddleback offers over 50 different beers and has a full bar. The Saddleback offers the best steak in the territory on Steak Night every Tuesday evening. The Saddleback has Karaoke every Friday night and a different live band every Saturday night.
